Families Find Help After Fleeing Aleppo

Thousands of families fled Aleppo at the end of 2016 after enduring a siege of catastrophic proportions. Mercy-USA for Aid and Development is identifying these displaced families who are scattered across northern Syria and bringing them some of the basics of life to survive.

Little Abdul Karim (photographed above with some of his brothers) and his family are one of those who fled Aleppo on the green evacuation buses and are now surviving in a small tent on the barren countryside. We brought the family life-saving aid to keep them alive. We gave the family a stove and fuel for the winter, plus nutritious food and a comprehensive kitchen kit that contains everything needed to serve, prepare and store food.
Too Cold for School? Not Anymore.

According to the United Nations last year, at least 2.1 million children inside of Syria were not in school. This number may be higher after the fall of Aleppo. Remarkably, we found that the families we help in Syria have lost their homes, their living, family members and worse, but despite it all, they’re striving to find ways to keep their children’s education on track. Hundreds of thousands of Syrians have fled their homes hoping to escape the violence. In these small villages and makeshift camps, the families have instituted schools and classrooms. For many kids, school days happen in tents. The children are learning; they’re being given an opportunity to just be kids and hopefully, feel normal.

However, Mercy-USA for Aid and Development found that classrooms all across northern Syria were closing as soon as winter hit due to the lack of any kind of heating source. That was something we could fix.

This winter, 500 classrooms across northern Syria now have heat and fuel to stay warm. That’s a lot of children who, despite enormous challenges, are able to continue to learn and make progress in their education.
The last two rainy seasons failed in Somaliland. April through June should bring life sustaining rain, but preliminary forecasts don’t show much hope. Mercy-USA for Aid and Development field teams who arrived to the region to supervise water trucking were astonished at the number of dead goats on the migratory routes. Each dead animal represents milk, meat and money to the family that lost it due to the lack of water. Families whose wealth is counted in the number of livestock they own are facing devastation and ruin without the rains.

Haadi Bare Yussuf, a forty-six year old single mother and grandmother, is a full time pasturalist with 3 surviving children and 4 grandchildren. She told us that before the drought hit, she had about 60 goats, and 22 camels. Her family was thriving on the income earned from her livestock’s milk and meat. She described the children as “healthy and plump” from the rich camel’s milk. When the rains failed so did Haadi’s herds. Soon, their milk wasn’t even enough to sustain the needs of the family, so they began to travel farther and farther in search of water. The trek was made more difficult by her disabled grandson who is not able to walk.

We found her living in the open under a tree with only 16 goats and 12 camels remaining in extremely poor condition. We trucked in water, and hygiene supplies and screened the youngest children for malnutrition. Haadi was grateful for the help, and hopeful that the April rains will fall so that she can begin to rebuild her family’s strength.

Mercy-USA trucked in water to drought-stricken communities in Somaliland, as well as hygiene supplies. We also conducted malnutrition screenings to identify any children in need of help at our nutrition and feeding centers across the region.
Indonesia Earthquake Leaves Families Hungry and Homeless

Last December, a 6.5 magnitude earthquake killed at least 103 people in Aceh Province, Indonesia bringing back horrifying memories of the devastating earthquake and Tsunami almost exactly 12 years earlier. Tens of thousands were displaced from their homes and living in tents. Among those severely impacted and homeless are two women we spoke to while distributing emergency food aid. Nuraini, 40 (at right), is a mother of four. She and her family abandoned their wrecked home. A fisherman, her husband’s income has dropped to such low levels due the quake that he’s not able to feed the family and cover the school tuition of the two older children. The food we supplied the family allowed Nuraini to keep the kids in school and feed the family.

Latifah (below) and her husband, a peddler and their three children, all under five, lost their home in the earthquake. The day we brought emergency food aid, she told us that not only had the earthquake severely affected her husband’s tiny business but they had gotten word that the tent encampment where they’re living would be closing soon. The food aid gave them a bit of solace and financial cushion as they look for alternative housing.
